

I do not want any Federal laws that weaken the excellent telephone privacy laws now in effect in my state of Indiana. Prior to going on the "no call" list October 1st of this year, virtually every dinner meal was interrupted by several phone solicitations. Calls came at all hours of the day and evening - even until 10 at night, even on weekends. The same companies might call 3 or 4 times within a week, despite being told each time that we had no interest in their product or service. The change since October 1st has been very dramatic. We now eat our meals in peace. We know that when the phone rings, it's nearly always a personal call. Don't dilute this law.
